

Joey Story

It was before 6:00 in the morning when I got thrown off the ship. It was sunny and warm, already above 80° and humid. But that's typical of the weather in Bali. I was in Kuta, traveling to Southern France on a freighter that had left Eastern Java the day before and anchored overnight in Bali. I had gotten into an argument with the ship's captain and he decided to dispense me early. Gave me the heave-ho, escorting me from my stateroom and then shoving off without looking back.

I thumbed a ride with another ship leaving that same afternoon and was back on my quest around the globe in search of the most authentic seafood recipes and fishing practices. I come from a long line of fishermen, and it's in my blood. But I got the bug to try something new during my short stint in college. I had traveled to Europe on a school break my freshman year and discovered that the best food I had ever eaten was being cooked, not by chefs in fancy restaurants, but by families in coastal villages with recipes that date back centuries. Simple recipes that allow the true nature of freshly prepared, hand cut seafood to come through.

If you're looking for a place to go and want to experience what great home cooking, hand cut and prepared fresh is all about, then Joey's is your everyday seafood place. Your local, family fishing village, where people live well and share great food and companionship.
